ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—Speaking [illegible] answer to the message [illegible] British Minister announcing the [illegible] of rights from the rebels [illegible] New York [illegible] says:

Mr. [illegible] Lord Russell's [illegible] upon the fact that in his [illegible] gnition from the [illegible] Government—as in [illegible] the rebels as belligerents [illegible] consult with France before [illegible] like anything but an [illegible] in the justice of their [illegible] courteous disposition toward [illegible] adversity [illegible] rush in [illegible] the question of [illegible] friendship to a kindred [illegible] Lord Russell [illegible] with the arrival of every [illegible] and an [illegible] the Emperor's Foreign [illegible] an opin[illegible] hard [illegible] with the dignity the [illegible] independence of a great power.

[illegible] can stand a few years [illegible] style of conducting the affairs of the British Foreign Office. We have [illegible] already. And there is something in getting used to a thing, even if we mildly protest [illegible] as Mr. Seward does in this [illegible] as the British Government stand [illegible] at the same time the ancient [illegible] Spain is not per[illegible] rank with the so-called Great [illegible] finds it to comport [illegible] herself at once and [illegible] private nuisance, with [illegible] to the ante[illegible] Foreign Office to find [illegible] There is a melancholy [illegible] for a first-class [illegible] that its agents and [illegible] their own until [illegible] disposition of some neigh[illegible] greater self-reliance. Eng[illegible] position before [illegible] revolutionary epochs [illegible] history.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—A paragraph is going the [illegible] stating that the announce[illegible] recently published of the passage of a boat [illegible] Canal amounted to nothing. So [illegible] It has been feasible for some [illegible] small boat through a consider[illegible] the bitter lakes [illegible] from near Suez. A [illegible] very little [illegible] with the [illegible] was necessary to make [illegible] small boat to pass from sea to [illegible] sand hills from [illegible] digging a pas[illegible] hills. In short the labor of making a temporary water channel from one sea to the other is but a trifle in comparison with the [illegible] a permanent ship canal. In a few years we shall be better able than now to judge of the possibility of success. The triumphs of modern science are great, and this mighty work is one worthy of the noblest efforts. But we regretted at the time of the publication [illegible] connected with the canal should have thought it necessary to deceive the people of France, England and America by an announcement calculated to convey the idea that the work was already practically completed, when it is but just begun.—*N. GEN. HOWARD'S TOUR OF INSPECTION.—The N. Y. Post of September 2[illegible]th has this paragraph:

It was announced some days ago that General Howard would set out on a tour of inspection through the South. He begins with Virginia, and is to examine thoroughly into the operations and the necessities of the Freedmen's Bureau in that State. This is done at the instance of the President, who [illegible] that the Bureau shall not anywhere do work which can be better or as well [illegible] Whenever in the Southern States justice is found to be equally administered [illegible] of course the General Government will no longer interfere, be[illegible] protection will not be required. [illegible] already disclosed shows that Davis sent men to burn the great bridge at Nashville, and that Benjamin agreed to pay them $100,000 for services. It is rumored that some officers of the government have expressed the belief that no objection exists against sending these prominent persons to St. Louis. It is also reported that Col. Bell has made arrangements with Hon. [illegible] Johnson, of Georgia, to co-operate with him in defending the persons now on trial and such others, including Davis, Mallory and Seddon, as may have charges brought against them.

POSSIBLY.—The Richmond Bulletin, speaking of Stonewall Jackson, says: "Possibly a prejudice may exist in their minds (those of loyal people) against General Jackson—a prejudice growing out of the fact that he drew the sword in the late war against the United States." Well yes we should think it not unlikely. We are not inclined to think as well of General Stonewall Jackson for instance, as of our dead McPherson or Mitchell, or Wadsworth, or Kearny or Reno, or Reynolds, or Rice, or Sill, or Mansfield, or Lyon. Any one of them is his superior in true manliness of character. Indeed, we are so "prejudiced" that we value more highly the memory of the [illegible] private who died under the flag of the Union than we do that of a man who educated at his country's expense used the training he thus received in a vain attempt to humiliate the flag which he had sworn to honor and uphold, and to destroy the country to which he had sworn to bear faithful allegiance. If men are to be honored for the possession of energy alone of course Jackson will be highly esteemed; but if the use they have made of their energy is to be inquired into, then Jackson will get admiration, but not esteem. Benedict Arnold was one of the ablest and bravest generals on our side in the Revolutionary war; but all his genius and bravery have not sufficed to conquer the "prejudice" which men have against turncoats and traitors.—New York Evening Post.

INDIA-RUBBER.—A paragraph in the North American Review says there are now in America and Europe more than 150 manufactories of india rubber articles, employing from four to five hundred each, and consuming more than 10,000,000 pounds of gum per annum. The business, too, is considered to be still in its infancy. Certainly it is increasing. Nevertheless there is no possibility of the demand exceeding the supply. The belt of land around the globe, 500 miles north and 500 south of the equator, abounds in trees producing the gum, and they can be tapped, it is said, for twenty successive seasons. Forty-three thousand of these trees were counted in a tract of country thirty miles long and eight wide. Each tree yields an average of three table spoonfuls of sap daily, but the trees are so close together that one man can gather the sap of eighty in a day.

COOLIES FOR THE SOUTH.—Capt. Boyle, for some time engaged in transporting Chinamen to Havana, is now in Mobile, proposing to furnish the South with such numbers of these people as may be required, believing that for either plantation or house servants they will afford the best and cheapest labor in the world. They can be hired for from $4 to $6 per month, with board and four suits of clothing a year. The Mobile papers recommend the matter to the early consideration of planters and others.

A correspondent who has seen her, describes Miss Braddon as "red-haired, stout, rather vulgar looking cockney woman of thirty-odd," and says she has been an itinerant actress and known great destitution. The combined sale of her books in England has been six hundred thousand copies; in America two hundred and fifty thousand, in France and Germany one hundred thousand. She has made in the past four years about forty thousand pounds, and [illegible] half of it.

The last invention of india-rubber, in Paris, is a "false bust for females—bust and neck"—a perfect imitation of flesh and blood, and (as they say of good counterfeits) "well calculated to deceive." Those "made to palpitate" are sold at a high figure.

The Pardoning Business

It seems to be understood that the whole South [illegible] with the possible exception of [illegible] to be pardoned sometime or other. The high and the low appear to stand an equal chance of [illegible]. Already rebels have been pardoned who were entitled to no clemency whatever. Generals and Congressmen and civilians of every grade, men who are directly chargeable with the great rebellion and who are personally responsible for the inhumanity and ferocity with which it was conducted are dealt with precisely as if they had been guilty of no more than a mere intent to commit an offence. Were those who seek and in most instances obtain pardon truly penitent we should say by all means, let them be dealt with in mercy. But many of them still persist in the utterance of treasonable sentiments, and instead of endeavoring to assuage the madness that still to some extent prevails in the minds of those over whom they may hold some influence, seem to labor to prevent the consummation of the idea which the President had in view when he granted them pardons.

We do not mean to censure the course the President has taken; it may be wiser than any other could be; but we cannot forget that many of the leading men in the country have misgivings upon the subject. The Northern people generally, are not governed by a desire to wreak an unmanly revenge even upon those who are far guiltier than other criminals have ever been; but they want to render themselves secure against the recurrence of such calamities as have lately befallen the country. They understand the value of the substantial results which loyalty and freedom have achieved. They perceive further, that the exercise of wisdom is necessary in order to give to these good results a permanence and security. Treason is a crime. It ought to be treated as such. John Brown suffered the penalty of the law; can any one show why Henry A. Wise, the man who hung him, is less guilty than he? It looks as if a general amnesty were approaching. Wade Hampton is already Governor of South Carolina. Toombs and Stephens may sit in the Senate from Georgia. If this class of men are permitted to resume control of the South, we shall have no peace in or out Congress for years to come. It is enough to grant these rebellious leaders their lives with the right of remaining in the country, without removing from them the disability to hold office again under our Government.

Negro Suffrage in Early Times

Not long ago we published extracts from the early constitutions of several of our States showing that in those times and in the States mentioned, there was no distinction on account of color as to who should possess the right of suffrage. These extracts were published merely as historical facts. With its usual utter disregard or wilful perversion of our political history, the Albany Democrat undertakes to say that the old constitutions of the States indicated, contained no such provisions in regard to suffrage as we cited! In this, or in a similar manner, the Democrat and its co-workers always try to get rid of facts which are unwelcome to them. When history is cited, when the authorities are given, when the words and the page are pointed out, even then we often hear from this class of persons a bold, presumptuous and emphatic denial of historical truths. History, in so far as it agrees with and supports their partisan ideas and narrow prejudices, is to be received as true; where it stands in opposition to them it is to be rejected as false. It is certainly a very convenient, but a not very wise method of supporting an argument to discard the best attested facts when they are found to be at variance with one's notions, and to adopt mere speculations and conjectures as the essence of truth, simply because they happen to coincide with one's crude and ill-considered opinions.

But to the point in question. The Constitutions of New York, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina, formed before the Constitution of the United States was constructed, and in force at the time of its adoption, gave negroes the same privileges as to suffrage which the whites possessed. To try to deny and dispute this fact would be as useless as to attempt to show that the several States we have mentioned had no constitutions at all prior to the institution of our present form of National Government. Nor was there any distinction on account of color in Connecticut and Rhode Island at that early day. These two States were under royal charters, and there could have been none. In Connecticut, negroes had the right to vote down to a period within the memory of many yet living. South Carolina by its constitution of 1776, allowed negroes to vote, but in 1777 the privilege was restricted, in the words of its fundamental law, "to every white man," &c. In Delaware, prior to 1787, colored men had the right of suffrage, but by an act of that year they were debarred from "the privilege of voting at the elections or being [illegible];" thus showing that the practice of admitting them to vote obtained in that State until the Legislature deprived them of the right. And at the time this act was passed, many were of the opinion that it was a violation of the constitution of the State.

In Virginia, negroes voted side by side with white men until 1850! In North Carolina and Tennessee black men held the right of suffrage until a comparatively recent date. All these things are incontrovertible facts, as the smallest acquaintance with any political history will show. It is puerile to contradict them. But the Democrat has such a habit of denying with vehemence whatever facts it cannot overcome, that we scarcely expect it yet to concede that history is anything more than an imposture. It may not be desirable to give the blacks the elective franchise now; but it is perfectly certain that they once possessed this right in every one of the "Old Thirteen" States.

THE JOHN DAY MINES.—Intelligence from the John Day country, gives encouraging accounts of the development of the rich mines of that region. New mines are being discovered in several localities and the country bids fair to become equal in richness to any now known. Both quartz and placer mines abound and proprietors are almost daily making new discoveries. Upon the system of small streams which from John Day, Burnt and Powder rivers, placer diggings are found. The country is yet only very partially explored, but the discovery of gold in so many localities shows that prospectors and miners are reaping large rewards for their industry and energy. We are fully of opinion that those who desire to try their fortunes at the business of mining can scarcely do better than to go into the John Day and Burnt river country. That region is easily within our reach, while all our other mines are at a greater distance from us. The present season there has been a scarcity of labor in these mines, but we hope to see more attention given to them by another year.

The St. Louis Republican says that Sterling Price has not received a commission from Maximilian. He has gone to Brazil. We wish he had gone to England or France, as we would prefer to have those countries cursed with all the rebel renegades from the United States.

REBEL GENERAL LOVELL.—The Mobile Tribune announces that General Mansfield Lovell is employed on the New York News as working editor. This distinguished West Pointer is trying to earn, no doubt by faithful service on a New York Democratic organ, a new place under the city government.

AN INCIDENT AT THE WHITE HOUSE—UNEXPECTED MEETING OF A BROTHER AND SISTER.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press of Sept. 29th tells this story:

On Thursday last an unusual and interesting incident occurred at the White House, among the squad of pardon seekers there. The supplicants were waiting, and among others were two persons—a modestly veiled young lady and a gentleman somewhat browned (a rebel soldier one quite likely) with a heavy heart and a careful dress. They had not paid any attention to each other during the hour or two they had been near and would not [illegible] had it not been for the usher. He came with a document and in a sharp tone called on a name inscribed on the envelope. [illegible] answered [illegible] Georgia, and was [illegible] the rest of the card [illegible]. The gentleman with an air of pleasure stepped forward to take it, when the lady with a little scream pressed forward and clasped him tightly in her arms. He at first seemed surprised by such an unwanted proceeding, but when she several times excitedly asked "Don't you know Jessie—Don't you know Jessie? You can't have forgotten me in such a short time," and removed her veil to show a fresh, piquant, pretty face, recognition was instant, and with one word, "sister," he was quite as demonstrative as she had been before. "Why Jessie, what are you doing here?" he asked. "I am here for father. He is very, very sick," she said with a little [illegible] of the [illegible] and a sob, "but he wants to [illegible] a citizen of the Union again."

The young man seemed affected but in the new found joy of meeting a sister long lost, the cloud that time did not darken his heart. A few moments after she also received the grant of her application.

It seems that the young man went out early in the war as Major of a Confederate regiment. He was taken prisoner in a skirmish just after Bull Run and spent two years in a Northern prison. Returning to service the cause of the Confederacy needed all the men for support it could obtain and he was forced to stay in the ranks. Letters he had sent home had failed to reach, and the despairing of finding his family after the march of Sherman over the State came North to see after a friend. This good work done he returned to Washington to look after his pardon. All this time his family gave him up as dead, all saying his sister, who met him so strangely, think so yet.

A HARD CASE.—A Virginia woman who had been accustomed to the comforts and luxuries of life previous to the late rebellion, writes as follows to the Richmond Whig:

You don't know how badly off we are in the country now, or you wouldn't wish to add to our trouble. We were so comfortable once, so happy in our homes. We did not realize then how good it was to want for nothing, but the little things we never think of now. We had our servants to look after, to be sure, and it was right hard sometimes to make them do this and that, and all that sort of thing, and they never would learn their catechism;—but then we would ride and walk and read our favorite books (I adore Byron) and the gay parties we used to have, and oh such a splendid pony! Papa has had to sell him to buy a plow horse. Poor papa, he is so old and careworn, and he has to plow himself, now, and feed and water the horses, and do all the work. He says he can't keep the servants; they stay a little while when there is not much to do, and go off to town when real labor comes, and never come back; and it's a shame, those that were treated the kindest and had the least work and never had a cross word spoken to them, were the very first to go away. They have gone away all but old mammy and Uncle Joe, who is bedridden, and mammy has to take care of [illegible] and Phillis' children, who ran off and left them. Ain't it dreadful? When the soldiers were here they burnt up nearly all the fences, and let their horses run over our flower garden, and they broke down all our roses and oleanders and all the shrubbery, and sister and I, work as hard as we can, will never be able to make it look like the same place. Pa says he will have to sell some land to live on this year—poor brother Jack's farm, who has lost his leg and can't work out doors at all, and he is trying to be a carpenter. It is a dear old place where we used to have our picnics and parties. We never will have any more—and think how horrid it would be to have some dreadful foreigners living there and never be able to visit it again. I didn't mean to write you all this about our trials but my heart gets so full of it sometimes, that I must talk to somebody.

THE COSTS OF THE WAR TO SOUTH CAROLINA.—In bank stock [illegible], bank bills depreciated, insurance companies reduced to bankruptcy, railroads broken up, houses [illegible] destroyed, in rebel scrip and securities now [illegible], in the losses of merchants, in the confiscation of estates, in the losses of cotton, horses, cattle, hogs, etc., in hard cash, silverware, [illegible] furniture and farming implements, in bad debts, in the prostration of all business affairs, and the depreciation of lands, the Charleston News sums up the losses of South Carolina from the war at the round figure of $150,000,000, and puts down her loss of four hundred [illegible] slaves as equal to $200,000,000 more—thus sweeping away three hundred and fifty millions of the four hundred millions worth of the property in the State in 1860.

This is the price which South Carolina has paid for her patent right and her [illegible] experiment by force of arms of a Southern Confederacy with the sceptor of King Cotton and resting on the corner stone of African slavery. At this rate five thousand millions will hardly cover the losses of all the Southern States involved in the rebellion. No wonder that the whole concern collapsed like an eggshell bubble with the surrender of Gen. Lee. No wonder that the suffering Southern people from Virginia to Texas are anxious like the prodigal son to get back home. Surely, as communities, those desolated States have ceased to be objects of wrath and have become objects of charity. "Forbearance and conciliation."—N. Y. Herald.

ANTI-SLAVERY SENTIMENT IN KENTUCKY.—The Louisville Journal writes: "Within the last five years the anti-slavery sentiment has made rapid and thorough progress in this State. In the Presidential election of 1860, only one thousand three hundred and sixty-four votes were polled in Kentucky for Abraham Lincoln. In 1864 he received twenty-seven thousand seven hundred and eighty-six votes; and in our recent election, when the question of emancipation was presented to the people more directly than ever before, the anti-slavery amendment ticket received fifty-four thousand and eight votes. The ratio of increase thus shown in the anti-slavery vote of the State demonstrates one of the most marked popular revolutions of which we have any record."

Kentuckians are thus coming to see the mischief which the slavery system has done their State. The Journal, the most influential press in Kentucky, says: "Slavery was never beneficial to Kentucky as a State, and the late war rendered it a positive material as well as political nuisance. This is the conviction which, during five years past, has been rapidly growing in the minds of our people and which will shortly lead to the removal of the institution from our borders. Kentucky's highest interest will be promoted by establishing the system of free labor throughout her limits as quickly as possible, and we may safely predict that before twelve months more elapse, there will not be found among [illegible] men a solitary advocate of the slavery system."

But a [illegible] in the north and west continue to join [illegible] the party which has always declared slavery a nuisance, and these fossils are so blind that they expect to curry favor with the south by supporting a system which all sensible men in the Southern States reject and see extirpated. A North Carolinian not long since warned the "Democrats" of the Northern States that unless they changed their [illegible] the Republican party would hereafter have a lasting majority in the Southern States.

A NEW PAPER IN RICHMOND.—The New Nation is the title of a journal whose publication is just begun at Richmond, Va. It carries at its title an American flag, beneath which is printed the word [illegible]. If any one attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot. The New Nation lays down the following platform: "The [illegible] preservation of the Union, the perpetuity of a republican form of government, the universal freedom of all men, the equal rights of all loyal American citizens before the law without regard to race or color, the establishment of systems of general education through the length and breadth of our country for the benefit of all classes irrespective of race or color, the rights of proscribed Union refugees and persecuted Union men everywhere, the interests of a high order of civilization, oppressed humanity and pure Christianity will be constantly [illegible] and faithfully advocated and defended by the New Nation."

We wish every Southern State could have a paper maintaining these principles and conducted with ability.

The rebel [illegible] Lowell was recently invited to a Copperhead dinner in Washington. He declined to attend on the ground that he could not feast with gentlemen who sympathized with the South in the late struggle and yet would not fight for her independence.

Somebody says that the Blair family is the only remaining "peculiar institution" in the United States.

SLAVERY IN CUBA.—[illegible] slavery in Cuba has [illegible]. As long as the institution existed in this country and was upheld by our [illegible], [illegible] had strong backing [illegible]. But now that it has fallen here it there stands alone in very [illegible] solitude on the North American [illegible]. The new power, importance and energy of the Liberal party in Spain, also works against the continuance of slavery in the Antilles. The Liberals of Spain, like those of every European country are strongly opposed to slavery, and would make short work of it had they the reins of government. Even [illegible] party [illegible] system has many foes, and it is [illegible] that under the influence now [illegible] through the world in favor of emancipation the measures which have been inaugurated in Spain in favor of gradual abolition will before the close of next year be pushed to their consummation.—*N. Harmony Lodge, No. 12, F. & A. M. [illegible] on 2d and 4th Mondays [illegible] o'clock, P. M. Brethren in good standing [illegible] By [illegible] W. M.

[illegible] The publisher [illegible] New York has [illegible] [illegible] 108 pages [illegible] The [illegible] West [illegible] Montana, Wyoming, [illegible] New Mexico [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] Among those who composed the [illegible] prospecting party in the Boise mines was [illegible] Grimes, formerly a resident of [illegible] Willamette river. The [illegible] party as it is usually called, had [illegible] the Boise Basin, and after prospecting up what is called Grimes Creek, made camp in the evening of the 10th or 11th of August [illegible] At this time the explorers, numbering [illegible] men, had passed pretty well across the best mines in the Basin, and had found prospects sufficient to establish the fact that they were in rich diggings. Being short of supplies the party were about to return to the settlements [illegible] River for supplies and reinforcements. None but those who have found rich mines after years of toil and ill success can properly appreciate the feelings of the members of that little band. [illegible] the camp was selected [illegible] was singularly adapted for an ambuscade. [illegible] that point where Grimes Creek, after plunging down out of the isolated stack of mountains commonly known as the Grimes Creek [illegible] turns from a westerly direction and runs off to the south into Boise River. From a grassy flat right at this bend it is only fifty feet to the top of the divide between the creek and the Payette river, while the descent to the river can be made under four miles of travel, and the perpendicular descent is over fifteen hundred feet. [illegible] either way from this pass, the hills rise to a considerable altitude.

It was late in the evening and the party had been engaged in sinking a prospect hole when two shots were fired from the slope of the mountain above the pass. Some of the men thought that the shots might have been fired by some of their own comrades, but Grimes appeared to comprehend the truth at once. He rushed up the hill side calling to the party to follow him, and was shot down by one of the savages. In fact, it is not certain that there was more than one Indian engaged in the murder, as but one track was ever found—and that was where a savage plunged down the mountain towards the Payette. Grimes was carried [illegible] camp and almost immediately expired. His comrades hastily threw his body into the prospect hole they had been sinking, and started for the settlements.

Later in the fall, when there were thousands of men in the Basin, his remains were found in the place where they were left, and the next spring were taken up and buried on top of the ridge in what will ever be known as Grimes' Pass. The grave is handsomely enclosed, and has a head board stating the time of his death and his age, which was thirty years. A more appropriate place for the grave of the brave explorer could not be found. From the pass there is a beautiful view of the canyon of the Payette and the mountains to the north. Fronting to the south east [illegible] Grimes Creek, the mountains rise in [illegible] timbered to the summit. Two hundred feet from the grave are the spots where he was [illegible] where he died, and where he was temporarily buried. At times the dashing waters of the Payette can be heard at this grave, and the creek which bears his name murmurs a perpetual lullaby. — Statesman.

Beecher on Negro Suffrage. — Henry Ward Beecher delivered a strong sermon September 24th in favor of negro suffrage. He made no argument for the negro per se, but put his advocacy of suffrage extension upon the broad ground that it is best for the Republic and for human progress to cultivate political distinctions between different races under the same government. He predicted a terrible conflict between classes unless the negro is taken out of politics by giving him all the legal privileges enjoyed by others. He concluded as follows:

We must accept our own ideas. I believe in liberty and universal citizenship, and would give it to all, were they ten millions in number. I protest that this great question must not be kept for settlement, nor left in the hands of parties to be bargained and scrambled over in the race for power, nor to the selfish spirit of commerce, nor to the [illegible] of those who owned the slaves, nor to the necessary prejudice and the turbulent hatred of the ignorant among us who are blind to the fact that the whole question of their own right and elevation stands on the same ground. No question is settled until it is settled right. We are called disturbers of the community, and radicals, so is the sap in trees, so is spring, which heralds the glorious summer. It has pleased God to give us victory on the field of battle. Our late foes are again coming pleasantly with us, and their leaders, seeing the folly of their course, ask pardon and advise a return to peaceful avocations—what more could we ask? Presenting to the world this grand spectacle of might in war, of fraternity in peace, having no turbulent desires for military despotism brooding in the breasts of the 1,300,000 soldiers who but a few weeks since bore our arms, what more glorious crown can be given to the column than the leading up to the status of citizenship the 4,000,000 emancipated black men who [illegible] persons we are and whose servants [illegible] first example, we should be? Go then, down among the poor and lost, seek them, find them, fill them with all elements of citizenship, show them the light which you carry, establish and [illegible] them in liberty, and God shall give you a blessing that neither your children, nor your children's children shall outlive to the remotest generation.

Roman Coins. — A great discovery of Roman coins is announced in Cornwall not far from Falmouth. On previous occasions similar deposits have been met with, which some local antiquaries account for by the Roman trade in tin once carried on in the southwest, while others say they were the spoils of the ancient Cornish in their battles with the Romans, buried in the ground for safe keeping.

[illegible] — The Washington Intelligencer says: We understand that Governor J. Madison Wells of Louisiana proposes to settle the labor question by sending all the negroes in America to Africa, and importing negroes in their places, who will serve under a sort of compensated apprenticeship system. A very good hit at the [illegible]

A STORY OF LOVE AND LAW

John Gordon kept the "Village Tavern." Gordon was a hard headed, stout bodied, red faced jolly humorous Scotchman. He was liberal, with an eye to the main chance. He was proud of his position as landlord, proud that his house should be known and spoken of in the great city of London, and not a little proud that so many considered it well worth their while to drive out to the "Village Tavern" that they might drink Gordon's inimitable punch, made from the peculiar whiskey of which the landlord had traced from the moment it came from the still just close by the foot of Ben Nevis, to the hour it went gurgling down the drinker's throat.

Of all these things was John Gordon proud. This was the pride of his profession, but there was one thing more of which he was proud, and to which all other things were but as accessories. This was his daughter Letty. Letty Gordon was the landlord's only child. He had married an English wife, and ten years after his marriage there came to John Gordon this one child. On the day that little Letty could count eight years, Mrs. Letty Gordon, senior, was called to another and a better world, leaving little Letty heiress of all the goods, chattels and real estate of which she died possessed, the last item being the "Village Tavern," with its furniture and belongings—a comfortable sitting out, which, with true Scotch thrift her good father had settled upon her the day she was married, and from which John had garnered a most solid wealth, which lay stretched out in various farms in the country round.

Letty Gordon had great blue eyes, very blue, very large and sparkling with suppressed mischief. Letty had light brown hair that danced about her head, laughing all combs to scorn, and almost repudiating a ribbon. She had the whitest skin and the whitest teeth, and the —— oh! this sounds too much like an auctioneer's summary. I shall end it by saying that she was just the merriest, sweetest, most enticing little fairy I had ever seen, and I am not alone in so believing. There were a few of the favored guests of the "Village Tavern," who could occasionally see Letty Gordon, but to the mass who came and went like shadows Letty was herself a shadow. They had heard of the landlord's beautiful daughter; once in a long while some one more fortunate than the rest would catch a glimpse of the little maiden but from whence she came, or whither she went the spectator could never tell. They drank the health quietly of the mysterious beauty of whom they heard so much, of whom they knew that she breathed the same atmosphere as themselves, and yet to them was a sealed book. This was the treasure that John Gordon watched and guarded—she who, already an heiress in her own right, was to inherit all the acres that he had been adding year by year from the overflow of the "Village Tavern." Letty was not only the admiration of the gay groups who came from the city, but she was the ambition of every rustic beau, who looked with covetous eyes upon the fair face and the broad acres of the landlord's daughter. They looked, but they looked in vain, for John Gordon had long resolved that whoever came wooing to his Letty should be no common man, but should out double her in wealth.

Letty Gordon was not the only fair attraction that brought the gallants to the "Village Tavern." There was another bright face, another comely shape in the person of Martha Field. Martha and Letty were of an age—both eighteen. Martha was an orphan, and had been taken when a child by the late Mrs. Letty Gordon to "care for." Martha was the right hand of the "Village Tavern," she was here, there, and everywhere, as John Gordon expressed it. If extra company came, and aid was wanted in the kitchen, Martha was able and willing. Whether Martha's hand was wanted in the bedrooms, in the parlors to wait on the guests, to attend to the bar, it was always the same, she was there. Whatever she did was well done. Many a smart farmer's son, who came as a suitor to the mistress, made a desperate effort to amend the hopelessness of the case by falling in love with the maid, only to find out that his fate was the same in either quarter. Martha Field had already disposed of the little beating heart that lay beneath her trim, well-fitting bodice. She had given it, subject to certain conditions, into the keeping of David Bigelow, a smart and promising carpenter, who, by some special art, lurking under his tongue, had managed to secure the little girl to himself in the face of the most startling opposition. Under these circumstances, there can be no wonder that Martha should be given to reading romances, and sympathising generally with lovers, particularly those in distress. There were some who said that when Martha Field married, John Gordon would come down "warm" with a trifle for the couple to start with; but those who knew the landlord better declared that as long as breath was in John Gordon's body he would not part with a pound of all he had so carefully hoarded, and now so strictly watched. In proof of this, they pointed to Letty and Martha, upon whom he had never lavished a penny, putting off their desires for showy dress, so inherent in the sex, by telling them that their faces would make their fortunes without ribbons and silk.

This was John Gordon's household, save only Aunt Judy, who reigned supreme in the kitchen department.

One bright day in June, when the leaves fluttered with more than ordinary gladness, and the sun glanced over the waters of the river, lending its light to the clear gravelly bottom, till it showed the lazy fish in their very homes, the Patterson stage rattled through the village, and dropped one passenger at the "Village Tavern." He was a tall, dark-complexioned man, somewhere about thirty, with a quiet, assured manner, that told the crowd of idlers who stood always ready to stare at the stage-passengers, if they were capable of receiving any impression, that the new comer was one not easily stared down, and well accustomed to all the attentions that could be thrust upon him.

He told John Gordon, who stood ready to receive him, that his name was Philip Conger, and his intention was to spend a week with him, and try his hand at the fish. John was pleased at the announcement, and told his guest so; more pleased as he noticed that the young man's luggage bespoke that money was plentiful; and still more pleased when he found that his liberal orders did full justice to his larder. Philip Conger fished until the venerable old trout and pickerel trembled in their [illegible] beds. He shot with such success that he awoke the jealousy of the stereotyped sportsmen of the place. He walked, he rode and drove, and so the week wore away, and yet he remained a guest of the "Village Tavern." Another week, and Philip Conger was still there, but he no longer fished, no longer hunted, his walks and rides were shorter, and the house had more attractions. In a few words he had seen Letty Gordon, and had spoken with her, and from that moment all things that carried him away from where he could feel that she was near had lost their charm. And, stranger still than this, Letty, who had been so invisible to all other eyes, now went flitting uneasily about the house. If Philip sat upon the settle, there were large chances but he would see her within the hour. If he walked roamingly about the garden, Letty had a bouquet to make up, some berries to pick, or something to do which he always could take a hand in. Those about the village who always see everything told John Gordon occasionally that Letty was at that moment under the charge of the stranger, being paddled leisurely along the river bank in a skiff, or had been seen at some past time walking with the stranger in some near lane, or sitting in some half secluded place earnestly talking. They could see that the landlord's face grew dark whenever such intelligence was brought him, and those about the house could observe that he no longer treated his guest with the same attention as formerly; there was a lack of that welcome and greeting that John Gordon had always for well paying guests, and then the gossips foretold a storm. They said that when John Gordon's face darkened there would be lightning flashes which would strike somewhere. There were other signs besides these foretelling this coming storm. Letty was seen once, twice, perhaps three times, in tears, and Martha Field had been heard openly to declare all fathers tyrants.

One day John Gordon, with a redder face than usual, and quicker step, went from bar to stable, from parlor to cellar. Something was in the wind more than common. The busybodies looked around and abroad for the cause, and were not long in finding out. There, almost opposite the house, and in full view, lay the little skiff at anchor, while Philip Conger with Letty Gordon as his pupil, was back at his old employment of fishing. Now, they said the long gathering storm would burst, but they were to be woefully mistaken when they believed it would break with violence over the head of Philip Conger. In their own good time the couple came back; they were in no hurry to hasten much, and then John Gordon, with his vials of wrath all charged, sought Philip. For an hour they were together in the room of Philip, but those who listened for the thunder of the storm, heard nothing. There was only the confused sound of the two voices, sometimes that of Gordon above the other, then as instantly calming down. What the mesmerism was that held the usually violent man was a mystery, but at the end of the hour John Gordon came forth pale and silent, and in another hour Philip Conger had turned his back on the "Village Tavern," never to be its guest again.

It was for his daughter all his harshness was reserved, and poor Letty had now not only to bear with her father's dark looks and stern words, but, what was worse, with a curtailment of her liberty. How she would have borne this, it would be hard to tell, but that Martha had brought to her a letter from Philip, written within that hour before he left the house, filled with his promises of love and his declaration that he would not depart from the vicinity and would find means to communicate with her. How well these declarations were kept, when Martha brought her intelligence that Philip Conger was within a mile, having found quarters at a farm house, scarcely that distance away, on the opposite side of the river. It may be held as a certainty that John Gordon was not long in knowing this, and further he knew that many days would not elapse ere the lovers would find means of a correspondence. Nor was John Gordon wrong in that. To Martha Field, Letty had confided everything, and Martha was now the Mercury that managed it; she did not carry the correspondence between Letty Gordon and Philip Conger, and David Bigelow, the worker who at the bidding of Martha, performed the part. Without actually knowing this, John was almost suspicious of him, and with him suspicion generated an extreme of measures. David Bigelow was at once forbidden the house, and the full weight of his displeasure rained down upon the head of Martha.

For weeks, things remained in this uncertain state. Whatever measures John Gordon intended to take were locked within his own breast. There was a mystery in progress through which none could fathom, and of which Letty Gordon held her ear seriously and troublingly, when Martha Field brought her the gossip she had heard stirring. John Gordon had been known to have had several private interviews with old Brown, the village constable. The old man had been seen lurking around the village suspiciously, as if smelling out some trouble. He spent a great deal of the time at the tavern to talk with the landlord, or sitting watching everybody and everything under his lowered brows. The gossips were busy again. They declared that between John Gordon and old Brown, there was something that would bring trouble to Philip Conger or David Bigelow. They had heard the landlord declare his intention of driving them both out of the village, and of turning Martha Field into the road to seek a home where she could. Perhaps he would not go so far, but every one who knew John Gordon knew that he would not stop half way in his efforts to reach any end upon which he had started.

Of late he had talked much about ingratitude, about those he had fed turning from him, about conspiracy, about nursing vipers in his bosom that turned and stung him, and for a long time these pickers up of unconsidered domestic trifles were divided in opinion whether the old man made allusion to his daughter or to Martha Field. They were soon satisfied when they perceived that he ceased to speak to Martha unless forced by necessity to do so, and then only with an expression that betrayed his unwillingness. Martha laughed at the threats of John Gordon to expel her from his house.

She knew that she was essential to the success of "The Village Tavern," and that if its landlord did not understand when he had a good and faithful servitor, she knew enough that would, and to those she would go. Martha Field set him at defiance, and still continued, with the aid of David Bigelow, to carry the letters of the lovers.

It was one evening in the early autumn, following a day that John Gordon and old Brown had been engaged in numberless consultations. The plot seemed to thicken, and those who had been peering about until they knew more of the matter than the actors themselves, said that it was near its catastrophe. The habitual redness had deserted John Gordon's face, it was pale instead, very pale for John Gordon. He stepped more quickly that night than was his custom from the bar to the parlor and so up stairs where Letty and Martha sat. Those who spoke of it afterwards said that many things passed that evening that were strange, but were not thought of in that way until the next day. They said that soon after dark a rower in a skiff looking very like the one Philip Conger was sometimes seen in, came slowly up the river, and lay for some minutes under the great willow that grew at the foot of the garden, and one of the gossips, living on the opposite side, says he saw this single rower leave his skiff, and stand under the willow, where in a few moments he was joined by one in a light dress, that they stood together for a short space, and parted—the skiff and its single rower returning the same way that it came. Another equally as veritable, two hours later, saw a carriage and horses, entirely unknown in that part of the country, traveling at great speed on the road toward London, and declared this carriage to contain a lady and gentleman, who, with corroborating circumstances, were believed to be Philip Conger and Letty Gordon.

Those who were nearer home saw, that same evening, a cart drawn up in front of "The Village Tavern" with old Brown as its driver. They saw him and John Gordon go together to the vacant parlor, where, after a talk, Martha Field was sent for. Within a few minutes the more inquiring, who pressed out of the bar-room for that purpose, saw Martha Field, John Gordon and old Brown drive away together from "The Village Tavern;" Martha without bonnet or shawl, and with a calm, scornful look, John Gordon with white face and pale, tight shut lips, and old Brown with a complacent expression of face, that would leave the impression with all who did not know him, that he had just performed one of the most benevolent and praiseworthy of actions.

The next day the village was startled from its sleep with the intelligence that Philip Conger had carried away Letty Gordon, and they were believed to be in London; that Martha Field, at almost the same moment that the runaway couple were commencing their flight, had been arrested on a charge of stealing money at various times from John Gordon, and was now in the county jail, entirely refusing to confess; that the stolen money had been directly traced to her by a plan of John Gordon and old Brown, the different coins having been marked to lead to detection and spent by Martha Field at different places in the village; and that John Gordon, upon his return from the Squire's, where Martha was committed, and finding that Letty had fled, started in pursuit, and was brought in half an hour afterward with a broken arm, having been thrown from his cart. This was news indeed for the gossips, and great capital they made of it. The stories that flew from mouth to mouth did not lose in telling. Some had it that Martha had robbed John Gordon of many hundreds of pounds in revenge for his refusal to bestow a marriage portion on herself and David Bigelow; others that Martha was thrown into prison by the landlord in revenge for assisting Letty in a marriage that would surely throw him out of the tavern stand. John Gordon was not rich enough to give Letty her little property, and he was not old enough to give up to younger men. It was strange then how many had seen and foretold all these things to themselves long ago, how many knew it would be so, and were not surprised in the least, and how many were ready with the charitable hope it would be a lesson to John Gordon, and teach him to see that there was an instability in wealth, and nothing really true but their advice.

A week rolled by, and John Gordon left his room, with his broken limb in splints hanging by a sling. He had altered, people said, so that week to be at least ten years older. His face was drawn and haggard, and the rosy healthy hue had gone out of his cheeks. His eyes were dim and there was no loud hearty laugh ringing through the house as in the old days. The loungers and gossips watched the old man as he went vacantly about the place with something like awe. They watched him as he was confronted in his own bar, that spot which only one short week before was his stronghold, by a man then before as pale and haggard as his own, who asked for justice in the part of Martha Field, and was refused. Then this man who was none other than David Bigelow, stood up before the landlord and the curious crowd, and told how Martha Field was guiltless, and that John Gordon knew it, when, in his base anger and desire to remove the means of communication between his daughter and Philip Conger, he sent an innocent girl, who should have been as dear to him as a child, to a criminal prison. John Gordon trembled with the rage he was obliged to suppress, and David Bigelow went on. Yes! he knew that the very money which he had marked as a trap was taken by his daughter Letty, as she had a perfect right to do, for was not the house and all within it hers, and all its profits, even to the last penny, even the lands he had bought with those profits hers. Yes! And he, John Gordon, knew this and more. He knew that Letty Gordon had taken this money as she would take any other thing that was her own, and had given it to Martha Field to purchase such articles as her father wrongfully denied her, paper, pens and ink, that she might write to the man to whom she had betrothed herself, and such things as were necessary to have when she fled from the home where she was a prisoner.

This he said and more. That Martha Field had refused to say anything on the night of her arrest, knowing that Letty would step forward for protection at the proper time; that it was Letty's intention to have left her home with Philip Conger within a few days of the time on which Martha was arrested, but why the flight should have occurred on that evening so precipitately was an unexplained mystery. One thing was certain, that when Letty had fled her home she did not, nor did she now know of the arrest of Martha Field, or she would come forward at any risk and show her entire innocence.

The old man sneered at David's story. There was law, he said, and justice for all. If the girl was innocent, let her show it, and all would be right. She had chosen silence when she was examined before the Squire; now let her wait until her trial. There was law and justice for all, and protection for him, too, and he would have it. John Gordon accompanied this to his declaration by a blow upon the table with his clenched uninjured hand, that brought back to the listeners some memory of the week before when it would have been dangerous to have provoked his wrath. David Bigelow drew himself up to his full height and speaking as calmly to the accused man before him as though his address was the commonest topic, he told him from that time forth no appeal should be made to him again for mercy; that he would go forth, and if Letty Gordon was alive, he would find her and bring her there to do Martha Field justice, and to confound his villainy. From that time forward John Gordon could look upon him as his deadly enemy, and remember that as he had denied mercy, so would it be meted to him. David Bigelow strode out of the room while the old man glared fiercely at the group who murmured their admiration of the carpenter, and one by one followed him out.

David Bigelow had left the village, none knew exactly where, but the surmise was that he had gone to London. Days and weeks slipped by, and nothing was heard from him. Martha Field was still a prisoner awaiting trial. John Gordon was gaining strength in his arm, the bone was knitting nicely, the Doctor said, but he was not gaining strength in the "Village Tavern." The neighbors came less and gossip less. The first excitement about it was over, the story had reached the city and every one knew something about it. There was one thing they could all see which was that John Gordon's face was pale, and the light of his eyes was gone. The day for Martha Field's trial came. There was great sympathy for her throughout the country. Her story was believed, but there was no evidence.

The prosecution made its case very clearly and distinctly. The loss of the money was proved; the marking, the tracing of the marked money through the village shops, where it had been passed by Martha. There was no defence; the very able counsel, who had volunteered for her, said he could only make the statement on behalf of the prisoner, and then he gave Martha's story, how she became possessed of the marked money. There was a dead silence in the court room as he closed a beautiful appeal for mercy for the prisoner. In its midst came a loud groan, and in a moment, after a shuffling of feet and several persons were straining to lift a man who had slipped from one of the benches and lay prostrate upon the floor. It was John Gordon, the strong man. Weak enough now he was, as they strove to raise him to his feet. His eyes were wide open and looking eagerly toward the Judge.

"Acquit her!" he said, "I am sorry. I know she tells the truth."

"Put that man back upon the stand," the Judge says, sternly.

The man was put back upon the stand, but he had nothing to say, only that his heart had softened, and he could see the truth in the story the prisoner told now, when he would not see it before. And so they carried him away to his cart and drove him home.

As they bore the old broken down man out by one door there were eyes met Martha's in the other that made her heart leap. Each of that jury said, when speaking of the case afterward, that they would have acquitted the prisoner through sympathy, without any evidence for the defence. When the eyes of David Bigelow and Letty Gordon met Martha's she knew that she wanted no sympathy now to send her out upon the world with a stain upon her name forever.

The truth had come, and when Letty Gordon, now Mrs. Philip Conger threw her arms about the prisoner's neck and kissed her, while she cried and laughed by turns, everybody knew the story as well as though it had been told. As a form, the evidence must be given, and before the tears had been dried upon Letty's cheeks, the verdict was rendered.

"Not Guilty!"

How the people shouted, until the Judge was obliged to adjourn the Court for an hour, to allow the enthusiasm time to cool! How the news spread like wild fire through the country town, and the ladies looked out of their windows and waved their handkerchiefs to Martha as she passed up the street from the court house! And now the little boys burned up all the stray barrels and boxes that night in her honor!

John Gordon retired from being host of "The Village Tavern," and David Bigelow and Mrs. Martha Bigelow took his place and for twenty years dispensed its hospitalities; after which period, round in purse and person, they gave way in turn. John Gordon lived many years after undisturbed in the wealth that by legal right belonged to Letty. Philip Conger was not rich, but fortune prospered with him and he grew so.

On the night of Martha's arrest, with the instinct of love, he knew that something was being plotted by John Gordon without knowing what, and believed it to be a scheme to remove Letty. Watching, he saw old Brown drive to the door with his cart. He stole noiselessly to the back of the house. He heard Martha summoned to the parlor. There was no time to lose. He knew every step of the house, and in a moment was beside Letty. There was no time for preparation, for thought. While the two men were accusing Martha in the parlor, the lovers were flying through the garden, and ignorant of all that occurred, until David Bigelow, by never ceasing search, found them and told the story.

I hope that it is not taking away the romance of my tale to tell that Letty Gordon and Martha Field, that were, are both grandmothers, comely and handsome at that.—Sixpenny Magazine.

U. S. Marshal's Notice.

District of Oregon—ss.

WHEREAS an Information has been filed in the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon, on the 14th day of September A. D. 1865, by J. N. Dolph, Esq., District Attorney, on behalf of the United States against Two Trunks containing Merchandise, alleging in substance that the said goods were, on or about the 20th day of May 1865, brought and imported from the port of Victoria in the foreign territory of British Columbia, under the dominion of Her Britannic Majesty, into the said District, and within the United States, by the overland route from Victoria aforesaid to the port of Portland in said District, without a manifest of such merchandise being delivered to the Collector of Customs, or to his Deputy at Port Angelos, which office was nearest to the boundary line of such foreign territory, and to said overland route, or to any Collector or Deputy Collector of Customs, and praying process against said goods or merchandise, and that the same be declared forfeited to the United States of America.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the Warrant under the Seal of said Court, to me directed and delivered, I do hereby give public notice to all persons claiming said merchandise, or in any manner interested therein, that they be and appear before the said District Court to be held in the city of Portland on Monday, the [illegible] day of November, A. ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

The Remedy for Curing

CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS,
Asthma, Croup,

Diseases of the Throat. Bronchitis, Pains and Oppression of the Chest and Lungs, Difficult Breathing and all the Diseases of the Pulmonary Organs.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC AND DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. It excites expectoration, and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucus; CHANGES THE SECRETIONS AND PURIFIES THE BLOOD, heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive organs; brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts strength to the whole system. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect that it is WARRANTED TO BREAK UP THE MOST DISTRESSING COUGH IN A FEW HOURS TIME, if not of too long standing. IT IS WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction even in the MOST CONFIRMED CASES OF CONSUMPTION! IT IS WARRANTED NOT to produce costiveness (which is the case with most remedies) or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. IT IS WARRANTED TO BE PERFECTLY HARMLESS to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. THERE IS NO REAL NECESSITY FOR SO MANY DEATHS BY CONSUMPTION, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it if only taken in time.

Sold by all Druggists. Price $1 per bottle.

DR. J. PERRAULT'S

FRENCH MEDICAL OFFICE,

FOR THE

CURE OF SPECIAL DISEASES,

ARMORY HALL BUILDING,

Northeast Corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets,

ENTRANCE ON EITHER MONTGOMERY OR SACRAMENTO STREET.

DR. PERRAULT CONTINUES TO TREAT PRIVATE AND CHRONIC COMPLAINTS, SCROFULA, NERVOUS DEBILITY, DISEASES OF THE BLOOD, SPERMATORRHEA, IMPOTENCE, STERILITY.

DR. PERRAULT is a Graduate of the University of Queen's College, and is the ONLY REGULAR GRADUATE who practices as a SPECIALIST in San Francisco.

DR. PERRAULT will cure all who are afflicted with Nervous Debility, Loss of Memory and Vigor, &c., resulting from injurious habits, contracted in youth, or excesses in maturity, which produce constitutional debility and premature decline.

It is a lamentable fact that thousands fall victims to [illegible] unskillful treatment and improper use of Mercury.

All cases of Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Strictures, Diseases of the Bladder, Gravel, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotence will be cured in a few days with all prevention from business.

To the Ladies.

Ladies suffering from White [illegible] Falling of the Womb, Suppression of the Menses, or Profuse Flowing, Costiveness, Piles, Weakness of the Back, Pain in the Side, Headache, Palpitation and all other diseases to which the female system is subjected, will find prompt relief by addressing themselves to DR. PERRAULT, corner Sacramento and Montgomery streets. Private entrance on Sacramento street.

Truth is seeking an advance, plain statement of their case will be given, whether curable or not. All cases taken under treatment warranted. No charges for advice. No poisons or harsh medicines to injure the constitution [illegible] frank in our opinions, moderate in our charges. We invite investigation, claim not to know everything, nor to cure everybody, but do claim to reason and common sense, and to cure eight out of ten pronounced incurable.

We particularly request those who have tried this Doctor and that Doctor and the Physician, boasted much and [illegible] till worn out and discouraged, to call upon us. It will cost nothing, as consultations are free.

N. B.—Persons at a distance can be cured at home by addressing a letter to DR. PERRAULT stating the case as minutely as possible, general habits of living, occupation, etc. Letters to be addressed, J. PERRAULT, M. D., corner Sacramento and Montgomery streets, Rooms 10 and 11, or Box 973, Post Office, San Francisco.

DR. PERRAULT still retains the agency of DR. BOYE'S FEMALE MONTHLY PILLS. Their immense sale has established their reputation as the only safe and effectual remedy for all irregularities and obstructions in females, no matter from what cause. On receipt of five dollars these pills will be sent by Mail or Express to any part of the world, secure from curiosity or damage. oc21, m
